Test 11- Read the following passage and answer all the questions.

There are some four thousand of species of mammals on the earth today but out of all these mammals, there are only four species which are considered by most people as livestock. These four are goats,pigs,sheep and cattle. These four types of animals survive best in a certain climate-that of a European one.Sont every country in the world can raise these animals as food. Some scientists believe that there is a solution to this problem. In tropical countries such as Asia, where animals like sheep do not thrive, there are often other alternatives-local animals that are similar to the four species and can adapt to local conditions.

The banteng of Indonesia is one such animal.It closely resembles cows in terms of physical appearance,but the fact is that it is not a cow. It is, infact, an animal found uniquely in Asian countries like Burma and Indonesia, and It is originally a wild animal. The banteng is however, tame enough for farmers to work with. Indonesian farmers actually prefer it to the cow because it is more nimble and so can plough the fields which normal cattle cannot. The Indonesians also value the banteng because it provides tasty meat, even better than meat that we usually eat,likebeef,pork or mutton. The banteng thrives in Indonesia's climate, which is hot and humid. Other animals would probably not do as well in comparison.

(1).What are the four kinds of animals considered as livwstock?.....

(2).In which climate can they survive best?.....

(3).Complete the sentence with the correct word from the passage.

“Sheep do not grow well in.....”
